

William Stockton is VP of Retail and Green Operations for Austin Habitat for Humanity. William has over fifteen years of nonprofit knowledge and leadership. His background includes nine years with Goodwill Industries of Central Texas, where he held several positions and became knowledgeable in retail, procurement, recycle, donation acquisition, and ecommerce. His experience with other nonprofits has provided William with the insight to grow donor counts, create metrics, generate programs that grow revenue and divert millions of pounds from our landfills each year.

William has been at Austin Habitat for Humanity for three and a half years, which has received several awards through their efforts in being stewards of our environment. William was also a judge for the “[Re]Verse Pitch Austin” competition, which allows teams to compete and turn valuable raw materials that are currently leaving local businesses, nonprofits, and institutions as waste into the raw materials for new or expanding social enterprises. He served as a panelist for the National Stewardship Action Council for Hazardous Household Waste ReUse, and is currently working with Green Standard to help liquidate items being removed from renovation projects.
